

Nouns

Proper and Common Nouns

Introduction to Nouns

A Noun is a name. This name can be that of a living being, a place, a thing or an idea.

For example:

Vinod is a friendly boy.

(‘Vinod’ and ‘boy’ are both names of living beings.)

I am standing on the road near India Gate.

(‘Road’ and ‘India Gate’ are both names of places.)

The only soft drink that he drinks is Pepsi.

(‘Soft drink’ and ‘Pepsi’ are both names of things.)

He will come in the month of June.

(‘Month’ and ‘June’ are both names of ideas.)

Proper and Common Nouns

Now, the next thing to know is that a noun can be the particular name of a living being, place, thing or idea. In the above examples, ‘Vinod’, ‘India Gate’, ‘Pepsi’ and ‘June’ are all particular names. Such particular names are known as Proper Nouns.

So, then what are ‘boy’, ‘road’, ‘soft drink’ and ‘month’? These nouns are the general names of a living being, place, thing and idea. Such general names are known as Common Nouns.

Hence, proper nouns are the unique names of living beings, places, things and ideas; while common nouns are the names of living beings, places, things and ideas of the same kind or class.

For example:

Naina is a good girl.

(‘Naina’ is a proper noun and ‘girl’ is a common noun.)

This rhinoceros is called Pintoo.

(‘Pintoo’ is a proper noun and ‘rhinoceros’ is a common noun.)

January is the first month of the year.

(‘January’ is a proper noun; ‘month’ and ‘year’ are common nouns.)

Last week, she was absent on Monday.

(‘Monday’ is a proper noun and ‘week’ is a common noun.)

Chennai is a city in Tamil Nadu.

(‘Chennai’ and ‘Tamil Nadu’ are proper nouns; ‘city’ is a common noun.)

English is a funny language.

(‘English’ is a proper noun and ‘language’ is a common noun.)

Shakespeare was a great writer.

(‘Shakespeare’ is a proper noun and ‘writer’ is a common noun.)

Which newspaper do you read?

I read The Indian Express.

(‘The Indian Express’ is a proper noun and ‘newspaper’ is a common noun.)

Which book were you reading?

I was reading The Great Expectations.

(‘The Great Expectations’ is a proper noun and ‘book’ is a common noun.)

Can I have some water?

You can have Limca.

(‘Limca’ is a proper noun and ‘water’ is a common noun.)

Collective, Abstract and Compound Nouns

When nouns point to a group or collection of living beings or things, they are called Collective Nouns.

For example:

The police are searching for the clues.

The army has won the battle.

Joseph was taking care of his uncle’s herd of sheep.

The crowd greeted the team with loud cheers.

(‘Police’, ‘army’, ‘herd’, ‘crowd’ and ‘team’ are all collective nouns.)

When a noun points to something about which you can only think or feel, it is called an Abstract Noun.

For example:

Honesty is a good policy.

Truth always triumphs.

Justice will be done.

(‘Honesty’, ‘policy’, ‘truth’ and ‘justice’ are all abstract nouns.)

A Compound Noun is a name which consists of two or more words that are used together.

A compound noun can be a single word.

For example:

The headmaster was writing something on the blackboard.

It can be a hyphenated word.

For example:

My mother-in-law and my father-in-law treat me just like their son-in-law.

It can be two words.

For example:

The police officer was waiting at the post office.

Singular and Plural Nouns

Singular means one, and Plural means more than one. A noun that has a singular and a plural form is known as a Countable Noun; while a noun that has only a singular form is known as an Uncountable Noun.

Words like 'blood', 'freedom', 'intelligence', 'rice', 'sugar', 'money', 'ice', 'water', 'oxygen', 'carbon dioxide', 'air', 'grass', 'luggage', 'information' do not have a plural form. Hence, they are all examples of uncountable nouns.

Now, the plural forms of countable nouns are formed in different ways. Some ways and their examples are listed below.

By adding s	By adding es
Snake – Snakes	Box – Boxes

Cat – Cats Goat – Goats Dog – Dogs Team – Teams Daughter-in-law – Daughters-in-law Passer-by – Passers-by Spoonful – Spoonfuls	Gas – Gases Bus – Buses Hero – Heroes Potato – Potatoes

Irregular Sheep – Sheep Deer – Deer Child – Children Man – Men Woman – Women Foot – Feet

Mouse – Mice

Tooth – Teeth

Possessive Nouns

Nouns can show possession or ownership. The possessive is formed by using the apostrophe (') mark. Let us look at some examples of nouns showing possession.

Hari's book is torn.

(Here, 'Hari's book' refers to a book belonging to a person named Hari. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

The postman's speech was encouraging.

(Here, 'postman's speech' refers to a speech delivered by a particular postman. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

The boy's dad is a pilot.

(Here, 'the boy's dad' refers to the father of a particular boy. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

The boys' project was a big success.

(Here, 'the boys' project' refers to a project made by more than one boy. Note that there is no 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

The girl's name is Geeta.

(Here, 'the girl's name' refers to the name of a particular girl. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

I study in a girls' school.

(Here, 'a girls' school' refers to a school where girls study. Note that there is no 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

Please call the child's mother.

(Here, 'the child's mother' refers to the mother of a particular child. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

I got a gift from my teacher on children's day.

(Here, 'children's day' refers to a day for children. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

Sudhir and Rajbir's shop is located in a mall.

(Here, 'Sudhir and Rajbir's shop' indicates that the shop is jointly owned by the persons named Sudhir and Rajbir. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

Rachna's and Naresh's presentations were liked by all.

(Here, 'Rachna's and Naresh's presentations' indicates that the persons named Rachna and Naresh made separate presentations that were liked by all. Note that there is an 's' after the apostrophe mark.)

The Indefinite Article and Nouns

Introduction to Articles

An article shows whether the noun that comes after it is specific or non-specific.

There are two types of articles—the indefinite article 'a' or 'an', and the definite article 'the'.

The first type points out non-specific nouns and the second type points out specific nouns.

For example:

A boy

(Here, the presence of 'a' shows that some non-specific 'boy' is being talked about.)

An elephant

(Here, the presence of 'an' shows that some non-specific 'elephant' is being talked about.)

The red car

(Here, the presence of 'the' shows that some specific 'red car' is being talked about.)

The Indefinite Article

'A' or 'an' is termed as the indefinite article because it does not specify the noun it talks about. In other words, it leaves the noun indefinite.

For example:

A girl is singing.

(Here, the noun 'girl' is left indefinite because of the use of the indefinite article. It is not specified as to which girl is singing.)

An umbrella is missing.

(Here, the noun 'umbrella' is left indefinite because of the use of the indefinite article. It is not specified as to which umbrella is missing.)

A student should be regular about his studies.

(Here, 'student' means all students in general. In this case, 'a student' represents the entire category of students.)

I am looking for an honest person to do this job.

(Here, 'honest person' means all honest persons in general. In this case, 'an honest person' represents any one honest person from the entire category of honest persons.)

The indefinite article is used for indicating a singular countable noun. In the previous examples, the indefinite article before each noun shows that exactly one girl is singing and that exactly one umbrella is missing.

The indefinite article 'an' is used when the word that follows it begins with a vowel sound.

For example:

He threw an egg at the player.

(Here, 'an' is used because the word that follows—'egg'— begins with a vowel sound.)

The mail arrived an hour ago.

(Here, 'an' is used because the word that follows—'hour'—begins with a vowel sound.)

He is an intelligent man.

(Here, 'an' is used because the word that follows—'intelligent'—begins with a vowel sound.)

The indefinite article 'a' is used when the word that follows it begins with a consonant sound.

For example:

There is a mouse in the room.

(Here, 'a' is used because the word that follows—'mouse'—begins with a consonant sound.)

His father has a university degree.

(Here, 'a' is used because the word that follows—'university'—begins with a consonant sound.)

I saw a beautiful umbrella.

(Here, 'a' is used because the word that follows—'beautiful'—begins with a consonant sound.)

The Definite Article and Nouns

'The' is termed as the definite article because it specifies the noun it talks about. In other words, it makes the noun definite.

For example:

The postman is waiting at the door.

(Here, the noun 'postman' refers to a particular or specific postman.)

The children are making a lot of noise.

(Here, the noun 'children' refers to a particular group of children.)

I have two pets—a dog and a cat. The cat is lazier than the dog.

(Here, the indefinite article 'a' is used before the nouns 'dog' and 'cat', when they are introduced for the first time. However, the definite article 'the' is used when these nouns are mentioned again.)

The definite article is used for indicating a singular countable noun.

For example:

The car has been stolen.

(Here, 'the' is used before the singular form of the noun 'car'.)

The definite article is used for indicating a plural countable noun.

For example:

The apples were very sweet.

(Here, 'the' is used before the plural form of the noun 'apple'.)

The definite article is used for indicating an uncountable noun.

For example:

The police asked the thief where the gold was hidden.

(Here, 'the' is used before the uncountable noun 'gold'.)

The definite article is used before nouns that are considered unique, and also before names of certain places, organisations, certain books, newspapers, famous buildings and certain abbreviations.

For example:

The sun, The earth, The moon, The sky, The equator,

The North Pole, The South Pole, The Indian Ocean, The Arabian Sea, The Brahmaputra River, The Thar Desert, The Andaman and Nicobar Islands, The Himalayas,

The United States of America, The Indian Republic, The United Nations, The Congress,

The Mahabharata, The Ramayana, The Indian Express, The Times of India,

The Rashtrapati Bhavan, The Parliament House of India, The Red Fort, The Taj Mahal,

The UK, The US, The BJP, The CPI (M)
